Discover Your Authentic Leadership

Abstract

In the academic health science network, the environment of health care, education, research and program development is constantly changing. The academic leader of the 21st century needs to work in collaboration with others to enable their organizations to respond, adapt and evolve. This requires authenticity; a seamless link between his/her values, beliefs, actions and behaviours.

Authentic leadership generates commitment and trust; key characteristics of effective work settings.

Learning objectives:

- Discuss the key features of authentic leadership
- Describe how your values, passions and strengths can inform your authentic leadership
- Identify how you can further develop your authenticity
